Ophthalmic Medical Technologists are members of the allied health medical eye care team. They perform assigned duties as assistants to the ophthalmologist (a physician) with whom they work. They function in a professional setting similar to that in which an x-ray technician works with a physician radiologist and medical technician provides information to the physician who is treating the patient. They are neither certified nor licensed as independent practitioners and they do not generate medical or surgical diagnoses or prescriptions.

The Admission Committee attempts to select individuals whose abilities, interests, values and character hold the greatest promise for success in this career. In our opinion, one of the better predictors of future success is past performance in a work, academic and/or volunteer situation.

We will appreciate your prompt attention to this applicant's request for your personal reference. The Admission Committee will review only complete applications and your reference is needed so we may consider this applicant for admission.
